Woman Owned Small Business Provides Expertise, Problem Solving Solutions to Government Agencies, Private Sector Companies

CHANTILLY, VA. – Jennifer Ann Rutledge, a 26-year organizational leader, and husband Steven W. Rutledge, a U.S. Marine Corps veteran and longtime security industry professional, are proud to announce the launch of SJR Security Consulting Services, LLC.

SJR works with security directors, defense and intelligence contractors, federal agency leaders, C-level executives, senior managers, and others in the public and private sector to align security resources to meet business goals related to risk management.

“Our services range from security risk management to policy and procedure development to helping to identify insider threats and prevent workplace violence,” Steven Rutledge, company president, said.

Since launching in January 2014, SJR has been responding to requests from established companies with working threat programs for knowledgeable third-party reviews and audits, as well as queries from small companies without the in-house structure or resources to implement such a plan.

“The federal government is moving to require ‘cleared’ companies and contractors to have a legitimate, robust insider threat program to guard against employees doing something detrimental to the U.S. government or the company itself,” Rutledge explained.

Specific SJR services include Security Strategy & Program Management; Policy & Procedures Development; Critical Infrastructure Protection; Risk Management; Security Assessments; OPSEC; Security Education; Crisis Management/Contingency Planning; Workplace Violence Prevention & Planning; Insider Threat; Antiterrorism/Force Protection; and Physical Security along with numerous other security disciplines.

Prior to serving as SJR President, Rutledge was VP of Security for TASC, joining the company in 2007 and overseeing all aspects of security, including supporting contracts involving classified activities as well as specialized services encompassing personnel, physical, program and information systems security, operational security, document control, crisis management, international security and security education and awareness.

A veteran of the United States Marine Corps, Rutledge holds a bachelor’s degree in criminal justice from Chadwick University.

Jennifer Rutledge, Owner and CFO, is a member of the National Association for Female Executives and National Association of Professional Women. In addition to her work founding
